MEDIA COVERAGE OF RELIGION IS 'BROKEN' – GLOBAL SURVEY CONFIRMS IT

Veteran religion reporter, Julia Bicknell, analysed a major global survey on media coverage of religion, conducted in 2022. The objective of the study was to identify how much of a global appetite there is for an enhanced discussion of faith in the media space.

The research was done in two parts. First, over 30 interviews were done with journalists in 17 countries. The second part involved an online survey of over 9 000 adults in 17 countries, including South Africa.

The journalists interviewed felt that coverage of faith and religion is poor, inconsistent, and becoming more marginalised. They expressed fear around getting religious coverage 'right', particularly in largely secular newsrooms. They said that 'religious' stories are not seen as a good fit for 'hard' news. It is easy to do 'soft' coverage of, say, festivals, and that the focus of 'hard' news only comes at times when religious leaders are mired in controversy or scandal.

Among the people who answered the online survey, there appeared to be a growing gap between the coverage of religion and the needs of the faithful. There is a global desire for better coverage, understanding and representation of faith issues in mainstream media.

According to Julia Bicknell, the current global digital news ecosystem, which is dependent on *clickbait and controversy, is broken and needs a radical overhaul.

*Clickbait: content that attracts attention and encourages visitors to click on a link to a particular web page

CONFLICT IN MYANMAR

The military government that ruled Myanmar during the 1980s through the 2000s mixed Burmese and nationalism with Theravada Buddhism and used that as a means to strengthen its legitimacy. It also heavily discriminated against minority populations in Myanmar, such as the Rohingya, Kokang and Panthay peoples.

The Rohingya are a Muslim ethnic minority group who have lived for centuries in predominantly Buddhist Myanmar (formerly known as Burma). Despite living in Myanmar for many generations, the military government does not recognise the Rohingya as an official ethnic group and have denied them citizenship since 1982, making them the world's largest stateless population. Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, described this as 'a textbook example of ethnic cleansing'.

In 2012, riots broke out between Rohingya Muslims and Buddhist Rakhines. The Myanmar government encouraged those riots, as there is evidence that Rakhine men were bussed from Sittwe and given knives and free food to participate in the riots.

Many cite religious differences as the culprit of the current crisis. Most Rohingya are Muslim in a Buddhist-majority country. Many prominent Burmese monks have turned against the Rohingya people, blocking humanitarian assistance and calling for their social and political exclusion along the lines of what some compare to apartheid in South Africa. Leading the charge against the Rohingya is a Buddhist activist group composed of monks and laity called '969'. Much of the international media describe the Rohingya as a Muslim minority suffering from religious persecution at the hands of an intolerant Buddhist majority.

The Rohingya have suffered decades of violence, discrimination and persecution in Myanmar. More than 1,3 million people were displaced within Myanmar in 2023, due to escalating violence following the military takeover in February 2021. More refugees and asylum seekers from Myanmar are hosted in other countries, including nearly 1 million stateless Rohingya refugees who are living in Bangladesh.

WESTERN IDEAS OF RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE

Modern human rights evolved in Europe as a response to the conflict across Europe caused by the Protestant Reformation and the Catholic Counter-Reformation. Thoughtful Europeans, including many deeply religious people, concluded that society would be peaceful if people and their leaders adopted the principle of religious tolerance. That led to the idea that every person should be free to believe what they want to and to express their views openly without having to worry about being persecuted.

This was not an overnight process. So while many people in Europe were learning to be more tolerant, others fled Europe to escape persecution. They ended up in the United States and in the then British colonies of South Africa, Canada and Australia. Particularly in the United States, the new colonialists set about establishing a society based on more religious tolerance than they had experienced in Europe. We can conclude from this that there were two forces that pushed Europeans to propose the idea of religious tolerance:

When you are part of a persecuted minority, then you will tend to support the idea of freedom of religious choice and tolerance. When you experience serious religious conflict with no winner, then you will tend to support the idea of religious tolerance and freedom of choice.
